TALLINN OVERVIEW

The name Estonia (which is Eesti in Estonian language) seems to derive from Aestii, used by a Roman chronicler in 100 B.C. to describe all the tribes east of Germany. Its capital –Tallinn– was first mentioned in written chronicles in 1154 by a famous Arab explorer Al-Idrisi, who back then marked it on its world map as Kolōvan. Throughout the history Tallinn has had other names given by its hostile neighbors: Lindanise by the Scandinavians and Reval by the Germans. Eventually the name Tallinn stayed.

The present-day Tallinn was first inhabited in the 10th century when a stronghold was built on Toompea Hill, which ever since remained the seat of the ruling power and the church authorities. The location was chosen by the first settlers for its favorable geographical position—a hillside in the immediate vicinity of the port, which conveniently remained on the East-West trading route.

The advantageous position of the town was an object of desire to many neighboring nations, which, at the end, turned to be a motive for continuous warfare.

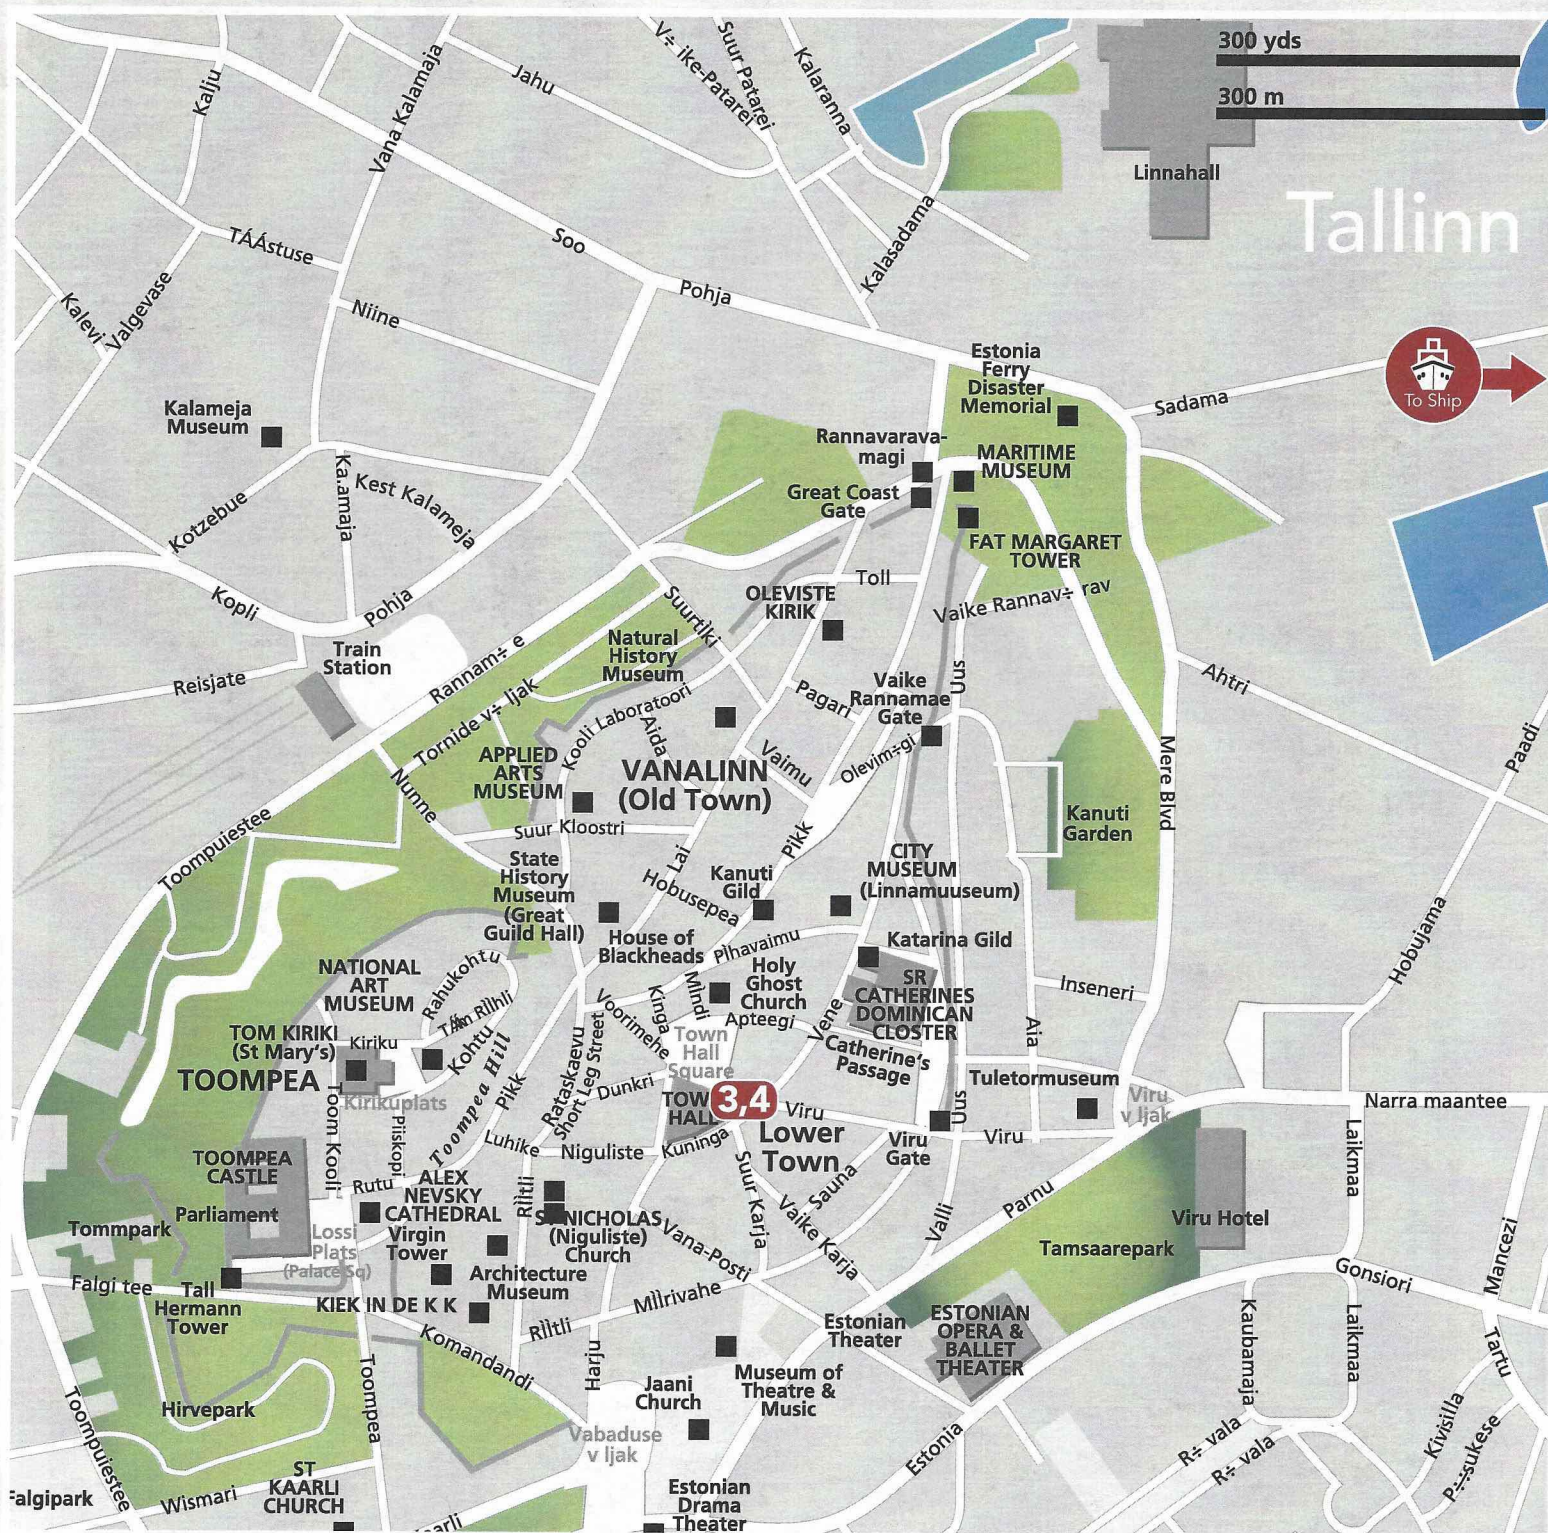

In 1219 the first foreign invasion occurred when the Danish invaded Northern Estonia. But 100 years later they got tired of the constant native rebellions, sold the territory to German Teutonic Order for 19.000 silver marks. A couple of centuries passed and the Swedes came and then the Russian Empire conquers the country. Estonia declares its first independence in 1918, which lasted until the first Soviet occupation in 1940, followed by Nazi occupation the year after and the second Soviet occupation in 1944.

The Republic of Estonia enjoys its freedom at the fullest for the last 16 years, when the Soviet regime fell into pieces and a totally new future opened up for many ex Soviet Republics.

Nowadays Tallinn is inarguably a beautiful town, which, in spite of numerous wars, rulers and reconstructions, has managed to retain its medieval environment and structure. Actually, the fact that the town's network of medieval streets, churches and houses has been preserved practically intact, has earned the town an honor to be inserted in the Unesco World Heritage List as a living museum.
